by Miss Mirlam Selah, after which Dr. Croffut was introduced. He depicted Washington in the early days of the civil war, surrounded with forts and dotted with hospitals. As a newspaper correspondent and private secretary for Salmon P. Chase, "the ablest member of Lincoln's Cabinet, chief advisor and fiscal director of the Presi-dent's policy," he had an intimate and informing touch with leading minds, and ould relate many anecdotes of the men and women who made history in those days. Gen. Spinner, he said, was a most energetic man, with an autograph so preposterous it could not be counterfeited by the prince of darkness.

Peggy O'Neill, winsome Irish lassie, Andrew Jackson's "good little peggy," who, as the wife of Senator John H. Eaton was the dynamic force of Old Hickory's administration. In her day she disrupted society, revolutionized political parties, sentenced John C. Calhound to po-litical oblivion, made Van Buren a Presidential possibility, called Francis P. Blair into powerful journalism, caused Randolph to pull President Jackson's nose, &c., until her personal influence was re-moved by Senator Eaton's appointment as Minister to Spain, where his wife was a reigning beauty at the court of Madrid for fifteen years.
